WHITE PAPER GIVES TEXT OF NAVAL ACCORD

Britain Withheld Details to Avoid Embarrassing Other Nations

BY WIRELESS

LONDON-A White Paper dealing with the Anglo-French proposals for limitation of naval armaments has been issued. It is a comprehensive document, covering the history of negotiations leading up to the exchange of notes containing terms of the proposed compromise and the subsequent correspondence with other chief naval powers. As a result of unauthorized and incomplete disclosures, the compromise became the object of public speculation, often of an erroneous and misleading character, and it is believed that the White Paper will place the matter in its true perspective. # Agronomist Finds East Can Compete in Wheat Growing

Handicap of Smaller Fields Than in West Balanced by Other Advantages

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.-Dr. H. B. Sprague, agronomist for the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station, has issued a statement directly opposing the popular belief that farmers in the East cannot profitably grow wheat in competition with their western neighbors.

The place and importance of wheat agricultural conditions and economists, he holds. They have been prone to argue that the West is the nonsignatory to this treaty. logical place for the cultivation of this crop because its larger fields allow greater effectiveness in the use of power machinery than is possible in the East.

ernment has given reluctant recognition of the French views in regard to army reserves as the price of at taining a naval agreement.

Unwilling to Embarrass Others Lord Cushendun explains that the only reason for withholding publica-tion of the papers was the desire not to embarrass other governments by what might have seemed an attempt to force their hand.

The publication of the papers at this juncture is regarded by the press and the public as having historic, rather than immediate, importance. as the terms of the agreement are being opposed by the United States and Italy and the compromise is con-sidered as already killed.

Text of Agreement The text of the agreement follows: 'Limitations which the Disarmament Conference will have to determine will deal with four classes of war ships:
"(1) Capital ships, that is, ships of over 10,000 tons or with guns of more than eight-inch caliber. "(2) Aircraft carriers of over 10, 000 tons.

"(3) Surface vessels of or below 10,000 tons, armed with guns of more than six-inch and up to eight-inch caliber. "(4) Ocean-going submarines, that is, over 600 tons.

"The Washington Treaty regulates in the agriculture of the East has limitations in classes one and two been minimized by many students of and the Disarmament Conference will only have to consider the method of nonsignatory to this treaty.

"As regards classes three and four, the final disarmament conferences will fix a maximum tonnage applicable to all powers, which no power will be allowed to exceed for the total of vessels in each of these re-Some advantages of the West as a spective categories during the period wheat-growing region are admitted covered by the convention. acquainted M. Briand with the modid proposals for naval limitation drafted by the British Admiralty, and added that public opinion realized general settlement.

'If we could point to a concession by the French in naval matters," he said, "it would probably acquiesce in my yielding a point on the military side. On the other hand, we could not abandon the British standpoint on the question of army reserves unless we could justify this concession pointing to a similar concession made to us in the naval sphere.

Reserves a Stumblingblock

"In the matter of land disarmament the question of the limitation of military trained reserves had proved a stumblingblock. The French Government and the majority of the governments represented on the Preparatory Commission had held that reserves should be excluded Government, for reasons into which it is here unnecessary to enter, had consistently supported the opposite thesis.

"For some time, however, they had action. realized that further opposition on their part to the exclusion of these trained reserves could, in the face of the attitude maintained by the majority of the Preparatory Commis-sion, only have the effect of preventing progress indefinitely.

"So long ago as April, 1927, the British representative on the com-mision (Viscount Cecil) clearly foreshadowed the withdrawal, for the sake of agreement, of British opposition to the opinion held by the majority of that body. When, therefore, the two governments were advancing toward a compromise in the matter of naval limitation, it was felt that the process of agreement could only be facilitated by a formal intimation to the French Government that a concession made to the views of His Majesty's Government on naval classifications would enable them to withdraw their opposition to the French standpoint in the matter of military trained reserves." The Daily Telegraph (Conservative) which had recently sharply scored the Government for secrecy, said the documents "so clearly estab-ish the bona fides of the Government that the most that can be laid in their charge is a mistake of method." The Times (Independent Conserva-tive) remarked "this sober record of what really happened has the effect of an anti-climax." Liberal and Labor Criticism The Morning Post (Independent Conservative) remarked that the Government's real mistake was de-parting from the approved methods of secret diplomacy by Sir Austen Chamberlain, when he announced in the House of Commons that the pact had been reached. The paper ex-pressed disapproval of the "foolish cruel and even criminal panic mongering and engineering by certain newspapers and Liberals and Laborites" which had surrounded the discussion of the agreement before its text was revealed.

"The Naval Compromise is a scrap of paper that should be dropped into the English Channel with all speed," says the Manchester Guardian. "Indeed, while disbarment at sea remains important, disbarment on land which has been so badly shirked, is more important, because the world's peace is menaced far more in military than naval rivalries."

The Daily Herald (Labor) said that the "Government's action had dangerously intensified American sus-picion of Great Britain." The desire is expressed that the length of the reparation payments be limited to the generation which fought in the war, and the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung points out that this question should be dealt with by politicians, instead of economists. The Reich, moreover, is striving to Government for Common Good As Dr. D. Leigh Colvin points out in his book, "Prohibition in the United States": "Assuming, for the sake of argument, that a man has a right to eat or drink what he pleases he has no right to require for his maintenance of a traffic or system the effects of which are deleterious to the interests of society.' Nor can it be consistently argued that the Government exceeded its rights in declaring the liquor traffic illegal, provided that definition of good government is accepted which, in an ancient Bill of Rights, declares that "government is constituted for the protection, safety, prosperity and happiness of the people, and not for the profit or private interests of any one man, family or class of men."

Since, as is explained in the case of State vs. Aiken (42 S. C. 422), "liquor, in its nature, is dangerous to the morals, good order, health and safety of the people, and is not to be placed upon the same footing with the ordinary commodities of life," it would seem to be an essential duty of government to see that liquor ceased to be a threat to the people

In the every-day experience of most Americans this definition of liberty is illustrated by numerous contacts. The good citizen observes the traffic law for two reasons: his respect for authority and his conviction that the traffic laws constitute a protection for himself and his neighbor ultimately making for greater freedom of movement.

Text of Hoover's Speech Opposing Smith's "State Socialism" Policy

This campaign now draws near a close. The platforms of the two parties defining principles and offering solutions of various national problems have been presented and are being earnestly considered by our people.

After four months' debate it is not After four months' debate it is not the Republican Party which finds reason for abandonment of any of the principles it has laid down, or of the views it has expressed for solution of the problems before the country. The principles to which it adheres are rooted deeply in the foundations of our national life. The solutions which it proposes are solutions which it proposes are based on experience with government and on a consciousness that it may have the responsibility for placing those solutions in action. In my acceptance speech I en-deavored to outline the spirit and ideals by which I would be guided

I intend rather to discuss some of those more fundamental principles and ideals upon which I believe the Government of the United Sttaes should be conducted.

Quotes G. O. P. Record

It is not my purpose to enter upon a detailed recital of the great constructive measures of the past seven and half years by which this has been brought about. It is sufficient to remind you of the restoration of employment to the millions who walked your streets in idleness; to remind you of the creation of the budget system; the reduction of six billions of national debt which gave the powerful impulse of that vast sum returned to industry and commerce; the four sequent reductions of taxes and thereby the lift to the living of every family; the enactment of adequate protective tariff and immigration laws which have safeguarded our workers and farmand immigration laws which have safeguarded our workers and farm-ers from floods of goods and labor from foreign countries; the creation of credit facilities and many other aids to agriculture; the building up of foreign trade; the care of veterans; the development of aviation, of radio, of our inland waterways, of the development of aviation, of the care of veterans. radio, of our inland waterways, of our highways: the expansion of scientific research, of welfare activities, the making of safer highways, safer mines, better homes; the spread of outdoor recreation; the improvement in public health and the care of children; and a score of other progressive actions.

That system now must be kept in perfect tune if we yould maintain uninterrupted emwould maintain uninterruped. Employment and the high standards of living of our people. The Government has come to tough this delicate web at a thousand points. Yearly the relations of government to national prosperity become more and more intimate. Only through keen vision and helpful co-operation by the Government has stability in usiness and stability in employment been maintained during this past seven and a half years. There always are some localities some in-dustries and some individuals who do not share the prevailing prosperity. The task of government is to lessen these inequalities. Never has there been a period when the Federal Government has when the Federal Government has given such aid and impulse to the progress of our people, not alone to economic progress but to the devel-opment of those agencies which make for moral and spiritual prog-

But in addition to this great record of contributions of the Republican Party to progress, there has been a further fundamental contribution underlying and sustaining all the others—and that is the resistance of the Republican Party to every attempt to inject the Government into business in competition ## with its citizens.

Post-War Problems After the war, when the Repub lican Party assumed administration of the country, we were faced with the problem of determination of the very nature of our national life. During 150 years we have builded up a form of self-government and a social system which is peculiarly our own. It differs essentially from all others in the world. It is the American system. It is just as definite and positive a political and social system as has ever been developed on earth. It is founded upon a particular concention of self-governticular concention of self-governticular conception of self-govern-ment; in which decentralized local ment; in which decentralized local responsibility is the very base. Further than this, it is founded upon the conception that only through ordered liberty, freedom and equal opportunity to the individual will his initiative and enterprise spur on the march of progress. And in our insistence upon equality of opportunity has our system advanced beyond all the world.

During the world.

During the war we necessarily turned to the Government to solve every difficult economic problem. The Government having absorbed every energy of our people for war, there was no other solution. For the preservation of the state and Federal Government became a centralized despotism which undertook unprecedented responsibilities assumed. precedented responsibilities, assumed autocratic powers, and took over the business of citizens. To a large degree we regimented our whole people temporarily into a socialistic state. However justified in time of war, if continued in peace time it would destroy not only our American system but with it our progress and freedom as well.

Wartime Ownership Wartime Ownership

When the war closed, the most vital of all issues both in our own country and throughout the world was whether governments should continue their wartime ownership and operation of many instrumentalities of production and distribution. We were challenged with a peace-time choice between the American system of rugged individualism and a European philosophy of diametrically opposed doctrines—doctrines of paternalism and state socialism. The acceptance of these ideas would have meant the destrucideas would have meant the destruction of self-government through centralization of government. It would have meant the undermining of the individual initiative and enterprise through which our people have grown to unparalleled greatness.
The Republican Party from the be ginning resolutely turned its face away from these ideas and these war practices. A Republican Con-gress co-operated with the Demo-cratic Administration to demobilize cratic Administration to demobilize many of our war activities. At that time the two parties were in accord upon that point. When the Republican Party came into full power it went at once essolutely back to our fundamental conception of the state and the rights and responsibilities of the individual. Thereby it restored confidence and hope in the American people it freed and stimu-American people, it freed and stimu-lated enterprise, it restored the Gov-ernment to its position as an umpire instead of a player in the economic game. For these reasons the American people have gone forward in ican people have gone forward in progress while the rest of the world has halted, and some countries have even gone backward. It anyone will study the causes of retarded recuperation in Europe, he will find much of it due to the stifling of private intitative on one hand, and overload-ing of the Government-with business

There has been revived in this campaign, however, a series of proposals which, if adopted, would be a long step toward the abandonment of our American system and a surrender to the destructive operation of governmental conduct of com-mercial business. Because the country is faced with difficulty and doubt over certain national prob-lems—that is, prohibition, farm relief and electrical power—our opponents propose that we must thrust government a long way into the businesses which give rise to these problems. In effect, they aban-don the tenets of their own party and turn to state socialism as a solution for the difficulty presented by all three. It is proposed that we shall change from prohibition to the state purchase and sale of liquor. If their agricultural relief program means anything, it means that the Government shall directly or in-directly buy and sell and fix prices of agricultural products. And we are to go into the hydroelectric power business. In other words, we are confronted with a huge program of government in business There is, therefore, submitted to the American people a question of fundamental principle. That is, shall we depart from the principles of our American political and eco-nomic system, upon which we have advanced beyond all the rest of the world, in order to adopt methods based on principles destructive of its very foundations? And I wish to emphasize the seriousness of these proposals. I wish to make my posi### tion clear; for this goes to the very roots of American life and prog-Impair Basis of Liberty

I should like to state to you the effect that this projection of government in business would have upon our system of self-government and our economic system. That effect would reach to the daily life of every man and woman. It would impair the very basis of liberty and freedom, not only for those left out-side the fold of expanded bureaucracy, but for those embraced within it.

Let us first see the effect upon self-government. When the Federal Government undertakes to go into commercial business, it must at once set up the organization and administration of that business, and it immediately finds itself in a labyrinth, every alley of which leads to the destruction of self-government.

Commercial business requires a concentration of responsibility. Self-government requires decentralization and many checks and balances to safeguard liberty. Our Govern-ment to succeed in business would need become in effect a despotism. There at once begins the destruc tion of self-government.

The first problem of the Government about to adventure in commercial business is to determine a method of administration. It must secure leadership and direction. Shall this leadership be chosen by Shall this leadership be chosen by political agencies or shall we make it elective? The hard practical fact is that leadership in business must come through the sheer rise in ability and character. That rise can only take place in the free atmosphere of competition. Competition is closed by bureaucracy. Political agencies are feeble channels through which to select able leaders to conduct commercial business.

Assalls Roard Rule.

Assalls Board Rule

Government, in order to avoid the possible incompetence, corruption and tyranny of too great authority in individuals intrusted with 'con mercial business, inevitably turns to boards and commissions. To make sure that there are checks and balances, each member of such boards and commissions must have equal authority. Each has his separate re-sponsibility to the public, and at once we have the conflict of ideas and the lack of decision which would ruin any commercial business. It has contributed greatly to the de-moralization of our shipping business. Moreover, these commissions must be representative of different sections and different political parties, so that at once we have an entire blight upon co-ordinated action within their ranks which destroys any possibility of effective ad-ministration.

Moreover, our legislative bodies cannot in fact delegate their full au-thority to commissions or to indi-viduals for the conduct of matters vital to the American people; for if we would preserve government by the people we must preserve the authority of our legislators in the activities of our Government.

Congress as Huge Board Thus every time the Federal Gov-ernment goes into a commercial business, 531 Senators and Congressbusiness, 531 Senators and Congressmen become the actual board of directors of that business. Every time a state government goes into business, one or two hundred state senators and legislators become the actual directors of that business. Even if they were supermen and if there were no politics in the United States, no body of such numbers could competently direct commercial activities; for that requires initiative, instant decision, and action. It took Congress six years of constant discussion to even decide what the method of administration of Muscle Shoals should be.

When the Federal Government undertakes to go into business, the state governments are at once deprived of control and taxation of that business; when a state government undertakes to go into business, it at once deprives the municipalities of taxation and control of that business. Municipalities, being local and close to the people, can, at times, succeed in business where federal and state governments must fail.

We have trouble enough with log rolling in legislative bodies today.

rolling in legislative bodies today. It originates naturally from desires of citizens to advance their particular section or to secure some neces sary service. It would be multiplied a thousandfold were the federal and state governments in these

The effect upon our economic progress would be even worse. Busi-ness progressiveness is dependent on competition. New methods and new ideas are the outgrowth of the new ideas are the outgrowth of the spirit of adventure, of individual initiative and of individual enter-prise. Without adventure there is no progress. No government ad-ministration can rightly take chances with taxpayers' money.

There is no better example of the practical incompetence of govern-ment to conduct business than the history of our railways. During the war the Government found it necessary to operate railways. That operation continued until after the sary to operate railways. That operation continued until after the war. In the year before being freed from government operation they were not able to meet the demands for transportation. Eight years later we find them under private enterprise transporting 15 per cent more goods and meeting every demand for service. Rates have been reduced by 15 per cent and net earnings increased from less than 1 per cent on their valuation to about 5 per cent. Wages of employees have improved by 13 per cent. The wages of railway employees are today 121 per cent above pre-war, while the wages of government employees are today only 65 per cent above pre-war. That should be a sufficient commentary upon the efficiency of government operation.

Quotes Gompers

Let us now examine this question from the point of view of the person who may get a government job and is admitted into the new bureaucracy. Upon that subject let me quite from a speech of that great leader of labor. Samuel Gompers, delivered in Montreal in 1920, a few years before his death. He said:

"I believe there is no man to whom I would take second position in my loyalty to the Republic of the United States, and yet I would not give it more power over the indi-vidual citizenship of our coun-

"It is a question of whether it shall be government ownership or private ownership under control. ... If I were in the minority of one in this convention, I would want to cast my vote so that the men of labor shall not willingly enslave themselves to government authority in their industrial effort for freedom. . . . "Let the future tell the story of "Let the future tell the story of who is right or who is wrong; who has stood for freedom and who has been willing to submit their fate industrially to the Government." I would amplify Mr. Gompers' statement. The great body of government employees which would be created by the proposals of our opponents would either comprise a political machine at the disposal of the party in power, or, alternatively to prevent this, the Government by stringent civil-service rules mus debar its employees from their full political rights as free men. It must limit them in the liberty to bargain for their own wages, for no government employee can strike against his Government and thus against the whole people. It makes a legisbody with all its political cui rents their final employer and mas-ter. Their bargaining does not rest upon economic need or econor strength but on political potence.

Limits Freedom of Competition

But what of those who are outside the bureaucracy? What is the effect upon their lives? The area of enterprise and opportunity for them to strive and rise s at once limited. The Government in commercial business does not tolerate amongst its customers the freedom of com-petitive reprisals to which private business is subject. Bureaucracy does not tolerate the spirit of inde-pendence; it spreads the spirit of submission into our daily life and penetrates the temper of our people not with the habit of powerful re-sistance to wrong Jut with the habit of timid acceptance of irresistible might.

Bureaucracy is ever desirous of spreading its influence and its power. You cannot extend the mastery of the government over the daily working life of a people without at the same time making it the master of the people's souls and thoughts. Every expansion of government in business means that covernment in business means, that covernment is provided in the same of the sam ernment in business means that government in business means that gov-ernment in order to protect itself from the political consequences of its errors and wrongs is driven irre-sistibly without peace to greater and greater control of the nation's press and platform. Free speech does not live many hours after free industry and free commerce dies. and free commerce die.

Is 'False Liberalism

It is a false liberalism that interprets itself into the Government operation of commercial business. Every step of bureaucratizing of the business of our country poisons the very roots of liberalism—that is, political equality, free speech, free assembly free pross and country assembly, free press, and equality of opportunity. It is the road not to more liberty, but to less liberty. Liberalism should be found not striving to spread baréaucracy but striving to set bounds to it. True liberalism seeks all legitimate free-dom first in the confident belief that dom first in the confident belief that without such freedom the pursuit of all other blessings and benefits is vain. That belief is the foundation of all American progress, political as well as economic.

Liberalism is a force truly of the spirit, a force proceeding from the deep realization that economic freedom cannot be sacrificed if political freedom is to be preserved. Even if governmental conduct of business could give us more efficiency instead of less efficiency, the fundamental objection to it would remain unaltered and unabated. It would destroy political equality. It would increase rather than decrease abuse and corruption. It would tife intitative and invention. abuse and corruption. It would stific initiative and invention. It would undermine the development of leadership. It would cramp and cripple the mental and spiritual energies of our people. It would extinguish equality and opportunity. It would dry up the spirit of liberty and progress. For these reasons primarily it must be resisted. For 150 years liberalism has found its true spirit in the American system, not in the European systems.

Fear of Trusts

The American people from bitter experience have a rightful fear that great business units might be used to dominate our industrial life and by illegal and unethical practices de-

It developed methods by which abuses could be prevented while the full value of industrial progress could be retained for the public. It insisted upon the principle that when great public utilities were clothed with the security of partial monopoly, whether it be railways, power plants—telephones or what not, then there must be the fullest and most complete control of rates, services, and finances by government or local agencies. It declared that these businesses must be conducted with his expectations. that these businesses must be con-ducted with glass pockets.

As to our great manufacturing and distributing industries, the Republican Party insisted upon the enactment of laws that not only would maintain competition, but would destroy conspiracies to de-stroy the smaller units or dominate and limit the equality of oppor-tunity among our people. Government Regulation

One of the great problems of government is to determine to what extent the Government shall regulate and control commerce and industry and how much it shall leave it alone. No system is perfect. We have had many abuses in the priconduct of business. That every good citizen resents. It is just as important that business keep out of government as that government keep out of business.

Nor am I setting up the contention that our institutions are per-fect. No human ideal is ever per-rect. No human ideal is ever per-fectly attained, since humanity it-self is not perfect.

The wisdom of our forefathers in-their conception that progress can only be attained as the sum of the accomplishment of free individuals has been reinforced by all of the great leaders of the country since that day. Jackson. Lincoln, Cleve-land, McKinley, Roosevelt, Wilson, and Coolidge have stood unalterably for these principles.

And what have been the results of our American system? Our country has become the land of opportunity to those born without inheritance, not merely because of the wealth of its resources and industry, but because of the try, but because of this freedom of initiative and enterprise. These agencies alone have in seven years increased by nearly 100 per cent the savings of the savings and the savings of the cent to the gigantic sum of over $50,000,000,000 or nearly one-sixth of our whole national wealth. The slogan of progress is changing from the full dinner pall to the full garage. Our people have more to eat, better things to wear, and better homes. We have even gained in elbow room, for the increase of residential floor space is over 25 per cent with less than 10 per cent increase in our number of people. The visitors at our national parks have trebled and we have so increased the num-ber of sportsmen fishing in our streams and lakes that the longer time between bites is becoming a political issue. In these seven and one-half years the radio has brought music and laughter, education and political discussion to almost every Springing from our prosperity with its greater freedom, its vast en-dowment of scientific research and the greater resources with which to care for public health, we have, ac cording to our insurance actuaries during this short period since the war, lengthened the average span of life by nearly eight years. We have reduced infant mortality, we have vastly decreased the days of illness and suffering in the life of every man and woman. We have improved the facilities for the care of the cuppled and helpless and deranged.

Expanded Educational System

From our increasing resources we have expanded our educational system in eight years from an outlay of 1,200,000,000 to 2,700,000,000 of dollars. The education of our youth has become almost our largest and certainly our most important activity. From our greater income and thus our ability to free youth from toil we have increased the attendance in our grade schools by 14 per cent, in our high schools by 80 per cent, and in our institutions of higher learning by 95 per cent. Today we have more youth in these institutions of higher learning twice over than all the rest of the world put together. We have made notable progress in literature, in art and in

We have made progress in the leadership of every branch of American life. Never in our history was the leadership in our economic life more distinguished in its abilities than today, and it has grown greatly in its consciousness of public respon sibility. Leadership in our profes sions—and in moral and spirtual affairs of our country was never of a higher order. And our magnificen educational system is bringing for-ward a host of recruits for the succession to this leadership.

Economic Freedom

I do not need to recite more figures and more evidence. I cannot believe that the American peo-ple wish to abandon or in any way to weaken the principles of economic freedom and self-government which have been maintained by the Republican Party and which have produced results so amazing and so stimulating to the spiritual as well as to the material advance of the

Your city has been an outstanding beneficiary of this great progress and of these safeguarded principles. With its suburbs it has, during the last seven and a half years, grown by over 1,500,000 of people until it has become the largest metropolitan district of all the world. It is the commercial agent of the Ameri can people. It is a great organism of specialized skill and leadership in finance, industry and commerce. which reaches every spot in our country. In fact, so much is this city the reflex of the varied interests of our country that the concern of every one of your citizens for national stability, for national prosperity, for national progress, for preservation of our American system, is far greater than that of any other single part of our country We still have great problems we would achieve the full economic advancement of our country. In these last few years some groups in our country have lagged behind others in the march of progress. I refer more particularly to those engaged in the textile, coal and in the agricultural industries. We can assist in solving these problems by co-operation of our Government. To the agricultural industry we shall need to advance initial capital to assist them to stabilize their industry. But this proposal implies that they shall conduct it themselves, and not by the Government. It is in the in-terest of our cities that we shall bring agriculture and all industries into full 'stability and prosperity. Wise Policles First In bringing this address to a conclusion, I should like to restate to you some of the fundamental things I have endeavored to bring

ut. The foundations of progress and prosperity are dependent as never before upon the wise policies of government, for government now touches at a thousand points the intricate web of economic and social life.

Under administration by the Republican Party in the last 7½ years our country as a whole has made our country as a whole has made unparalleled progress, and this has been in generous part reflected to this great city. Prosperity is no idle expression. It is a job for every worker; it is the safety and the safeguard of every business and every home. A continuation of the policies of the Republican Party is the supdamentally. fundamentally necessary to the further advancement of this prog-ress and to the further building up of this prosperity.

I have dwelt at some length on the principles of relationship be-tween the Government and business. I make no apologies for dealing with this subject. The first necessity of any nation is the smooth functioning of the vast business machinery for employment, feeding, clothing, housing and pro-viding luxuries and comforts to a people. Unless these basic elements are properly organized and functhere can be no progress in business, in education, literature, music or art.

No Advance in Basic Ideals There can be no advance in the fundamental ideals of a people. A people cannot make progress in

I have endeavored to present to you that the greatness of America has grown out of a political and social system and a method of control of economic forces distinctly its own—our American system—which has carried this great experiment in human welfare farther than ment in numan weitare farther than ever before in all history. We are nearer today to the ideal of the abolition of poverty and fear from the lives of men and women than ever before in any land. And I again repeat that the departure from our American system by injecting principles destructive to if jecting principles destructive to it. which our opponents propose, will copardize the very liberty and freedom of our people, will destroy equality of opportunity not alone to ourselves but to our children.

To me the foundation of American life rests upon the home and the family. I read into these great economic forces, these intricate and delicate relations of the Government with business and with our political and social life, but one supreme end —that we reinforce the ties that bind together the millions of our, families, that we strengthen the security, the happiness and the lade-pendence of every home. Ordered Freedom for All

My conception of America is a land where men and women may walk in ordered freedom in the independent conduct of their occupations: where they may enjoy the advantages of wealth, not concentrated in the hands of the few but spread through the lives of all, where they build and safeguard their homes, and give to their children the fulland give to their children the full-est advantages and opportunities of American life; where every man shall be respected in the faith that his conscience and his heart direct him to follow; where a contented and happy people, secure in their liberties, free from poverty and fear, shall have the leisure and impulse to seek a fuller life.

Some may ask where all this may lead beyond mere material progress. It leads to a release of the energies of men and women from the dull drudgery of life to a wider vision and a higher hope. It leads to the op-portunity for greater and greater service, not alone from man to man in our own land, but from our country to the whole world. It leads to an America, healthy in body, healthy in spirit, unfettered, youthful, eager—with a vision searching beyond the farthest horizons—with an open mind sympathetic and generous. It is to these higher ideals and for these purposes that I pledge myself and the Republican Party.

Harvard Political Expert Declares Two Parties of Equal Strength Best

The United States as a whole, in recent years, has been strongly Republican, and is steadily growing more so, says Dr. W. B. Munro, professor of municipal government as Harvard University. Dr. Munro made this statement at a nonpartisan political inquiry, held at the Boston Y. M. C. A., where he explained the uses of political parties.

"Should the Democratic Party wage a defensive presidential cam-paign," said Dr. Munro, "their chances of success would be almost negligible. In a pre-campaign canvas, approximately 200 of the electoral votes would be Republican. to an average of 120 Democratic. The waging of an aggressive campaign is the sole Democratic hope of election."

Dr. Munro stated that the radio has probably done more to promote real democracy than any other single "Not since I was born," he said, "has there been such fine political discussion as at present. The fact of huge, unseen audiences has practically done away with the old wildly gesticulative 'spellbinding.' Politicians now seem to know that they must come down to 'brass tacks,' and they are doing it.

In sketching the ideal political state Dr. Munro asserted that there should be two political parties of almost equal strength, so that the strong minority might always be on the lookout for any missstep on the part of the majority. He disfavored the idea of more than two parties. saying that "if one would find the worst country on earth, he sl look for the one with the most political parties.

When asked, he will be able to state that consideration in a few words, and those ords will be his interpretation of the common sense of the situation If one can now define what the common sense of the situation is as visualized by the average man, he will have stated the argument most acceptable to voters as a guide to decision. Defines Reasons for Liberalism

"It would destroy political equality. It would increase rather than decrease abuse and corruption. It would stifle initiative and invention. It would undermine the development of leadership. It would cramp and cripple the mental and spiritual energies of our people. It would extinguish equality and opportunity. It would dry up the spirit of liberty and progress. For these reasons primarily it must be resisted. For 150 years liberalism has found its true spirit in the American sytem, not in the European systems."

We had very little money, no experience, and a lot of competition. We succeeded so well, however, that it wasn't long before our friends asked us to help them start tea rooms, too!

We found that it was a wonderful business, it was easy to start because we knew how to cook and serve and be friendly to people. As we learned more we carned more. Menus in French

Y USING a little imagination, many much-used menu terms of chicken served with a sauce suprême, consisting of a rich velouté are easily understood, with only mixture, plus thick cream and either the most casual acquaintance with truffles or mushrooms. This menu the French language. For instance, term contains nothing of mystery, the culinary term, "Velouté," which is often applied to creamy soups, sauces and entrées, requires little imagination when one recalls that the word "velours" is the French for velvet. Naturally this term stands for something smooth, rich and velvety in texture. "Blanquette" tells its own story of whiteness, whether used in connection with a preparation of meat or fowl; "Mousse" designates something that has the soft fluffiness of moss, whether referring to an entrée or a frozen dessert, and certainly a "Bouchée" would mean only a mouthful in its diminutiveness, regardless of where it happened to be found on a menu. "Vol-au-vent" well describes a patty so light and brittle that its shell of puff-paste could literally be blown away by the wind the mere detail of size and filling having nothing to do with the apt description of its airiness.

The surprise dishes on a French menu are always interesting in their interpretation. Whether "en surpris," "bombe," or "chartreuse," a dish so described spells mystery, the choice part of the preparation being entirely concealed by an outer coating of other material. "Tomato surprise," for instance, may contain almost any savory mixture within its scarlet curve: rice chartreuse may be a mold of rice with a heart of creamed chicken or mixed fruits, depending on whether it is a hot entrée or a cold dessert; a "bombe" may be either a large or an individual mold of ice cream with a richer and differ-ing center not seen until it is cut. In strong contrast to such surprise dishes is any food served "en bellevue," which is capable of being trans-lated almost literally as a beautiful

Ruskin Is Interested

As is often the case, it seemed like a mere chance that led her to become a lecturer. In her childhood she had known Ruskin. When a young schoolgirl she wrote to him asking his advice on her career and received a reply in a letter which was somehow mislaid. Knowing the contents by heart, she wrote them out and sent them to him asking if he would please send her another identical letter. The reply came: "I have never had such a pretty compliment in my life as your knowing my letter by heart. Where is New Malden? I am coming to see you."

True to his promise, Ruskin came to see her, not at the school at New Malden, but at her own home, and there he talked to her about all sorts of things.

"He asked," she said, "'Do you say your prayers? Trust is the best prayer.' I have never," she added, 'told that to any newspaper before. Then he gave me a lesson in perspec-tive. He asked for a sheet of notepaper and drew ellipses, and asked me to draw and paint one of our old nel. Spode china cups

The Neglected Okra

KRA is a very delectable, though widely neglected vege-table. Like cotton, it is a southern plant, yet the writer had quanti-ties of tender though small pods in her Chicago war garden, and has also grown it in St. Louis. The plant is of African origin, and is cultivated extensively in the southern part of the United States and in the West Indies for its mucilaginous green pods that sometimes attain four or five inches in length.

It must not be planted until all danger of frost is past and must be thinned so that the plants stand a foot apart. It requires plenty of water and bright sunshine. The leaves resemble those of the fig, while the flower is like a cotton sauce.

Okra Ovstars bloom. Six or eight plants will furnish an ordinary sized family with okra from early summer until late fall. The plants attain great size in the South and may be planted against a fence as a decoration.

Promptly, the retail grocers of America were notified that Monarch would can no tomatoes that season, because the quality available was not worthy of the Monarch label. #### Of 67 Acres

The idea of making an international campus as a part of the university organization and of bequeath ing it with adequate facilities for rec reation was originally put forward in 1918 by André Honnorat, Senator and former Minister. To his assist-ance came immediately Emile Deutsch de la Meurthe and his wife Deutsch de la Meurtne and ins vice with an offer of 10,000,000 francs for the construction of an initial group of French buildings. Paul Emile Aport Prench Buildings. Paul Buildings. Paul Buildings. Paul Buildings. A law was passed in 1921 by which the state bought back from the City of Paris some 67 acres of the old fortifications and these difficulties one will not only land adjacent and presented them to the university for its "Cité Universitaire"- as it was decided to call the whole project.

The French quadrangle was ready for use in 1925. The plan called for open space to be allotted any and all nations for the purpose of erecting houses—as many as so desired. The Prince of Wales opened the Canadian house in 1927. Today the Argentine, Belgian, Japanese houses are finished, and one for agronomical students as well. Workmen are busy among the scaffolding and lower brick walls of the American house. British, Dutch and Indo-Chinese constructions have heen let poetry speak for herself. The Prince of Wales opened the Canadian house in 1927. Today the Chinese constructions have been started, and Spain, Sweden, Poland, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Colombia, Brazil, Rumania and Armenia (through the generosity of an Armenian donor) have all agreed to build homes for their students. There will be probably more than 20 of these national houses eventually.

Each country is permitted to have its individual architecture. France has selected a château style; Canada has a charming house of stucco finish after the manner of an elegant home in the outskirts of Toronto (when recently seen, this house had window boxes below each window, and these boxes were filled with flowering nasturtiums); America is erecting a dignified edifice which will recall something of a rich club house and something of an American university dormitory; Great Britain is desirous of planting on French soil a group with an air of Oxford or Cambridge; Japan already has pa-goda roofs on its impressive house; Belgium has a handsome building of red brick surmounted by small towers; Indo-China promises Annamite features; and Holland, Spain, Sweden and the rest will each endeavor to introduce architectural characteris-

The oral reading of poetry, however, presents some problems that improve his reading but reap some valuable by-products as well.

One of the first of these problems will have to do with rhythms. The rhythm of English conventional peetry is metrical. A poem, in other words, has a pattern more or less complex in form. Stressed and unstressed syllables follow each other let poetry speak for herself.

Taking an Example

Let us, therefore, begin our study by reading the story of Little Miss Muffet. Read it several times aloud until you can really feel the rhythm. For rhythm is something that must be felt as well as heard by the ear. Stress heavily the metrical accents.

But if you are somewhat dramatic

It is this constantly recurring departure from and return to the metrical pattern, in obedience to rical thought, that is one of the beauties of poetry. The great poets have all recognized and been governed by this underlying law. Without this variety in unity, poetry would become mere jingle.

And so the movie began. It was deep, dark secret at first, and, strangely enough, although pupils in other classes felt that there was something "in the wind," it remained a mysterious something until Latin posters heralded the coming of the reat event.

Our class of nine-eight girls and ne lone boy-divided itself into comborary for ways and means of making costumes; a fourth, in conjunction with the scenario committee, worked out Latin titles and subtitles. The work of this last committee had to be done with a good deal of care, for there entered into it two important questions: the first, that of expense. We were advised to have the titles and subtitles made rather than to try to photograph them ourselves. to try to photograph them ourselves.

I want to race with you," nor could Atalanta, answering, urge, "Do not try this thing! Race not with me, for I am fleet of foot." Their words must rather be, "Te amo. Since then the economic life of Algeria has been improving steadily every year. Today this portion of North Africa is the most magnificent overseas possession of France and one of the most beautiful countries o be found in the world.

Large vineyards and cereal fields extend throughout her three departments, the former covering an area of over 200,000 hectares, while the ereal fields include 3,200,000 hecares producing annually from 25,-000,000 to 35,000,000 metric quintals of wheat, barley and oats, while her vineyard crop averages 6,000,000 ectoliters per year.

In order, however, to extend the agricultural line, very considerable hydraulic works are being under-taken with the idea of cultivating new lands which up to now have been waste ground. This hydraulic policy is being conducted side by side with the mining one. The ore producing area here is very large, and attention is being called to the fact that Algerian mines, owing to their development, will possibly in he near future change the economic

According to Custom House statisics, the different ores shipped broad reach a total of about 30,000,-00 francs, and the natural phosphates, almost as much. The latter

Algiers, that of the Orient with all its mysterious life and its old customs still religiously kept behind the ever-silent walls of a special town, known as the Kasbah, which dates back to medieval times. This quarter of old Algiers, built by Christian slaves centuries ago, was the cradle of Moorish piracy in the Mediterranean, and since then been left untouched. Here you find the religion and character of the people in the warm shade of old mosques, the narrow streets, scarcely more than stairways, their sides walled up with silent abodes; where

The Kasbah, in fact, is a complete town; it is entirely built on the steep slope of a hill, at the foot of which the European city stretches. It is crossed in all parts by numberless streets paved with round stones, the longest of these totaling no less than 500 steps. Its white or blue terraced houses, piled one above the other, climb along the slope up to the top of the hill, where the castle-fortress (Kasbah) of the ancient Turkish masters of Algiers is still fairly well preserved in its former architecture, and now used as mili-

When Miss Baylis determined that the Old Vic. Company should con-tribute to the celebration of Ibsen's centenary, she did well to select that early play, "The Vikings." Ibsen, however, unquestionably had in thought another part-model for his play-namely "Macbeth," which is strongly recalled, in the duologue between Hiördis and Sigurd, in the third act, and again in the fourth act—"One for thee, and one for me" while the witch-chorus is chiming in the air, an interesting and significant fact, when one remembers that Ibsen imitated "Macbeth" a second time, in his much later, and fully mature play, "The Master Builder, now being revived at the Everyman

"The Vikings" is an immature drama in the sense that its story and treatment are simple, and much less symbolic than is the case with his later work, but this tale of Gun-nar and of Sigurd the Strong, who slew the great white bear that guarded Hiördis, and himself fell to Hiordis's arrow, is already masterly in its construction, and in the playwright's power-young though he was-to wring the last drop of drama out of every scene he wrote. A Play by De Jong

THE HAGUE, Holland-"Merijntje lijzen's Jeugd ("The youth of Meriintje Gizen"), is a new Dutch play by the Socialist De Jong. His stories of Merijntje, a boy living in Noord Brabant, on the Belgian frontier, and his rough adventures with poachers and smugglers, have met with unusual success in Holland. The author presents his story in 20 scenes strung ogether with passages from the book which are read during the intervals for scene shifting. Cor van der Lugt Melsert has produced it very adequately. To facilitate the quick changes necessary for this story a circular revolving stage was used. A young girl, hitherto unknown on the stage, gave a sincere rendering of Merijntje, while Napoleon de la Mar performed the part of De Kruik, the

Another Irishman, Charles Coghlan, had a passion of respect for our English tongue. He felt that everyone acting a part, whether he had transcendent ability or mediocre talent, could at least learn to pronounce words according to the best authority, and so help to raise the standard of the English-speaking stage. Freighters Handle Passengers

Transatlantic passengers who seek coming vessels from the Orient arto cross the ocean in an economical rive on Saturdays at both Victoria manner have recently been using freight ships to an increasing extent. The American Merchant Lines early recognized the possibility of handling a few passengers and fitted its ships to accommodate approximately 75, at tourist third class rates. They cross in eight or nine days.

Even cheaper than this rate, however, is that offered by the American Diamond Line, another United States Shipping Board line operating to Continental ports from New York. On some vessels of this line a few passengers are carried at a rate of 875 to Rotterdam or Antwerp. Such rates on vessels of the class of the Innoko, 8000 tons, include passage, berth and meals and while the accommodations are not sumptuous. they are the best the vessel affords and the passengers cat at the officers'

This winter, however, the lines will be in full operation in every way and are expected to prove a great boon to tourists. By a combined railway and railway-road-coach service it is already possible to reach Algiers in four days from Tangler and, next year, when the missing section should be completed between Taza and Oudjda, it will be possible to get in the train at Tan-gier and go straight through, without changing, to Algiers and Tunis.

The Marquess of Bute has been engaged for the past year in Tangier building operations and is now about to launch out on a much bigger scale. Apart from building villas for winter r sidents, he has recently acquired the Villa Valentino Hotel for enlarging and is about to erect a large firstclass hotel. The Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, who have been building hotels all through North Africa during the past two or three years and organizing motor tours from Algeria to the Niger, are also about to put up a hôtel de luxe on the sea front. Two other large hotels are also to be erected.

MODERATE SALE OF CLOTH AT NEW BEDFORD

Sheetings Division Is Most Active-Wide Goods and Tire Fabrics Ordered

NEW BEDFORD, Mass, Oct. 23 the primary cotton cloth market last week was somewhat quieter than in recent weeks there market last week was somewhat quieter than in recent weeks there was a fair volume of business transacted in all divisions.

Sellers maintained their prices, and did not attempt to press their goods for sale, while buyers, after failing to obtain concessions, limited their purchases to their immediate needs.

Print cloths relinquished the lead in trading which they have held for many weeks. A moderate volume was moved at fair prices. The 64x60s 5.35-yard sold at 7% of or spot and near-by delivery, but those beyond November were held at 7%c; the 68x72s 4.25-yard brought 8%c early in the week, but later sold for 9c to 9%c for early and 9c for distant delivery; the 80 squares 4.00-yard moved at 11c for spot and 10%c for future delivery. The 27-inch 64x60s 7.60-yard sold at 6c for December and 64c for near-by delivery.

The sheetings division registered the greatest activity among the coarse yarn goods. The bag trade bought heavily early in the week, and the demand was such as to lift the prices of some constructions. The 31-inch 5.00-yard was a popular number at 6%c. The 40-inch 2.85-yard at 11%c and the same width 2.50-yard at 12%c were taken in good volume. The 40-inch 5.00-yard brought 7c.

Wide goods were again active, with the automobile trade and the various covering trades the principal buyers. All orders in this division are taken for delivery after the first of the year as the mills producing them are occupied for the balance of this year. The 54-inch drills 1.93-yard sold at 19%c and the 67-inch 1.87-yard at 22c. The 72-inch wide sheetings 2.75-yard brought 17%c, and the 52-inch 3.85-yard at 11%c. RADIO BEACON INSTALLATION GOING AHEAD

Transcontinental Airway to Have Accurate Navigation Aids

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU WASHINGTON - Radio direction beacons that will mark the transcontinental airway and coincide with the lighted routes will soon be installed by the Department of Commerce in its program of developing the airways. A study of requirements for such facilities on the air-way from New York to San Francisco has led to the conclusion that such a project is wholly feasible, requiring few or no angulations in radio signals to mark the course between the beacon lights. "The greatest service will be renthe aeronautics branch reported, "and absolute confidence will be inspired when the pilots learn that the radio signals mark definite, unvarying courses and intersect at fixed marks." Flashing beacons, which send dot-dash signals in addition to lighting the terminal points are located 200 miles apart, and it is proposed to install the radio beacon stations at positions halfway between these.

Six Beacons Soon Ready

Equipment for six of the radio beacons will be delivered this fall, in addition to the equipment already available at Hadley Field, N. J., Bellefonte, Pa., and Cleveland, O. These will furnish complete radio direction on the Chicago-New York airway and on the San Francisco-Salt Lake airway. Radio direction is regarded as specially needed over the eastern and western mountains in order to help the pilot pursue a bee line course and know his location at all times for determining altitude.

The radio beacon signals are received in specially built sets and can be heard or seen, according to the devices used. The Bureau of Standards has developed a reed indicator which is tune to the frequency of the beacon signal and vibrates accordingly. By

Intent

"Intent conveys the thought of eagerly leaning forward to fuller development. Although considered practically synonymous with "intention" the shorter form has a force-fulness lacking in the longer. The Latin in and tendere combine to mean "to stretch toward," hence to be attentive to, and thus later to have a fixed aim.

While "intent" signifies a purpose ful turning of the thought to some definite object, "intention" suggests little more than what one proposes sometime to do. "Design" involves some craftiness. "Motive" is less in-clusive than "intent," as it takes into account only the urge behind an act. The final syllable is accented intent'. Sound I as in tln, e as in get.

A DOG was being swept down the swift current of the Black River at Watertown, N. Y., toward the falls, when his struggles were noticed by some workmen. According to an item sent in by Mrs. E. W. ### A Plea for the Status Quo CIPEAKING recently in Chicago, the Democratic Party's candidate for the Presidency sought to make light of the pledge made, in the Republican Party's platform that indorsement by the voters would assure to the people of the United States a continuation of those political and economic policies which have prevailed during the last seven years or more. In his address in New York last night, Herbert Hoover, the Republican nominee, stated or restated the argument in support of the platform pledge so convincingly and so circumstantially that the impression might be gained that he had failed to discover the subtle humor attempted by his political opponent.

To Mr. Hoover, and to millions of the American people, it does not seem a matter of jest that it is seriously contemplated to abandon the proved policies of the present Administration simply that an opportunity may be given to experiment with the theories which are being urged as substitutes. He made it clear in his New York address that there is no justification for the belief that the people demand a change simply that they may take a chance in the hope of bettering their economic and social conditions. Probably at no previous time in the history of the United States was there less inducement to indulge in political experimentation. Mr. Hoover comes near summing the whole up in a single sentence when he says: "We have in this short period (seven and a half years) decreased the fear of poverty, the fear of unemployment, the fear of old age; and these are the fears that are the greatest calamities of human kind."

Addressing a vast audience of voters identified, either directly or indirectly, with industry and commerce, Mr. Hoover took pains to state with clearness and definiteness the processes which will be continued to maintain the status quo. He enumerated some of the benefits which have inured as a direct result of the administrative and legislative program followed by the Government of which he has been a part. He proved, it would seem, to the satisfaction of many, that no really revolutionary methods must be resorted to if it is desired to proceed along the path which has been traveled in recent years. He did not find it necessary to apologize for his party because it seeks to guarantee another four years of American prosperity.

A popular battle cry in former political campaigns, upon which varying charges were rung by orators in the camp of the "opposition," was 'Turn the rascals out!" This is not often heard this year. One is left to speculate as to the reason. Perhaps if the cry were sounded some one might inquire just why that subject should be mentioned. Those who heard or have read Mr. Hoover's latest speech will hardly gain the impression that there is need of a resort to any such heroic method.

The thoughtful person who must decide his own course between now and November 6 will, in reaching his conclusion, give due consideration to the plain precept expounded by Mr. Hoover in stating his own and his party's position in defense of individual initiative in business and industry as opposed to political or governmental bureaucracy. "It is a false liberalism," he says, "that interprets itself into the government operation of commercial business. . . . Liberalism is a force truly of the spirit, a force proceeding from the deep realization that economic freedom cannot be sacrificed if political freedom is to be preserved."

Chain Farming

S MUCH as one may wish, it is seemingly A impossible to keep the industrial situation and the agricultural problem separate and distinct. One of the latest authorities to join the two issues is Robert S. Brookings, an educator of considerable prominence, who is now engaged in directing an independent agency for economic research in Washington, D. C. Mr. Brookings has caused to be published in pamphlet form some views he has recently submitted to the daily press. In this he gives a more complete and extended account of his views on the subject than has hitherto been available. Briefly, Mr. Brookings proposes to apply to agriculture the practices of industry. He would establish agricultural operations upon a businesslike basis, even to the point of incorporating properties and farming equipment. In some instances, he believes, it might be well to extend the "chain store" idea to farming and have corporations engaged in managing agricultural operations upon a string of small farms. Such an industrialization of farm operations, according to Mr. Brookings, would tend to reduce the cost of producing farm products and thereby save the consumers of the country from any probability of being burdened with increased costs of foodstuffs. In the promotion of such a scheme of farm "relief," however, Mr. Brookings runs into some of the same difficulties which are today being experienced by industry. The Sherman Antitrust Law prohibits combinations in restraint of trade among the several states. Industrialized agriculture might prove successful, did not the projected agricultural "corporations" run counter to the antitrust statutes. Manifestly, from a purely economic point of view, the remedy proposed would be a good one if there were any assurance of its successful application. In numerous businesses, leaders have advanced similar remedies for specific industrial difficulties. But the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission have not been inclined to permit their application.

It has been about a hundred years since the first state in the American Union authorized the incorporation of business associates. During the last fifty years the most intensive growth of corporations has been witnessed in the United States. These have successfully weathered the volumes of adverse criticism that has, during all these years, been leveled at them. Corporate opportunity, economic advantages and subservience to public welfare have been sufficiently demonstrated. Although authorized by law, corporations have not been especially encouraged by administrators of the government. Instead, the only federal statute of regulatory importance has dealt solely with the criminal aspects involved and been purely restrictive in its influence. The antitrust statutes have, according to the defenders of corporate welfare, outlived their usefulness, and on all sides the demand is being made for their revision or complete overhauling. This, it would seem, is necessarv before the Brookings suggestion for farm aid can receive serious consideration.

Algeria Bestirs Itself

N ANOTHER page some insight is given into a country in northern Africa which, though little known, is rich in resources, picturesque in its contrasts of light and shade, and historic in a high degree, in that it was once the granary of the Roman Empire. Algeria is about 1500 miles distant from London, and can be reached by way of Paris and Marseilles in fifty hours. If the Sahara is included within its limits, its area extends over 1,000,000 square miles, while the country proper is almost the size of France.

Legends have thrown a glamour over Algeria. Both artist and author have heightened the color of its sunshine, its golden sands, its Arab costumes. And the tourist has added to the picture by his brief impressions. Yet there is much to be said for its red cliffs and sapphire sea, its vines and pasture land, its busy commercial port within striking distance of the rolling Sahara, and for the growing ease with which its wide expanses can be traversed. The camel caravan still winds its way over the great wastes, but train and car are fast supersoding it.

Algeria, essentially an agricultural country, is handicapped by lack of rain. Nevertheless, it yields much from its cereal fields, helps to supply the markets of England and France with vegetables, and affords lucrative employment for those who engage in sheep raising. Big developments are foreshadowed in the hydraulic works now in progress, by which it is hoped to convert waste into cultivable land, and by the steps taken to increase the mineral production of the country. Algeria has begun to bestir itself. In the words of an authority:

The Phoenicians guessed its value; the Romans realized it; the Arabs forgot it all; and the French are beginning to complete what the Romans began.

The Trend of British Labor.

THE expectation that the comparatively moderate program submitted to the British Labor Party Conference by the National Executive would be accepted by a very large majority has been fulfilled. The opposition, which had received exceptional publicity before the conference by the pronouncements relating to the Maxton-Cook alliance, proved in fact to be so weak and out of touch with the general body of opinion among the delegates that its voice was hardly heard when the program was discussed in detail.

In the preliminary general discussion on the program as a whole, James Maxton and John Wheatley, Labor leaders, sought to discredit the document by describing the majority of the proposals contained in it as "Liberal." Their own specific suggestions, however, were so extreme and impracticable that they were not merely rejected, but derided. This comment applies particularly to the astonishing statement by Mr. Wheatley that the first act of a Labor government should be to make a pool of all the wealth of the country, fix both maximum and minimum wages for all, and subsidize these wages out of the pool.

The general impression in the conference was that, having committed himself deliberately to such a proposal, Mr. Wheatley has ruled himself out as a practical politician or statesman, and that he will drift still further from the main body of the party. Mr. Maxton, on the other hand, may be persuaded to give up the task of attempting to influence immediate measures for carrying Labor policy into effect, and devote himself again to the propagation of Socialist idealism, for which he seems quite well fitted. While these personal considerations are not of the first importance, they do serve to bring into clear relief the general trend of the British Labor movement now that it has virtually freed itself from the influence of the Communists and their close allies. The new program was not accepted merely because the executive recommended it. The high standard of the discussions, the keen intelligence with which the arguments were followed, and the large part taken in the discussions by "rank and file" delegates, left no room for doubt that the great issues of policy are fully understood. The avowed aim of Socialism was certainly reaffirmed, but there was no talk of the old kind when the phrase. "Socialization of all the means of production and exchange," seemed to open an easy way to a new social order.

The specific "nationalization" measures mentioned in the program are limited to coal, power, transport, land, and life insurance, with a special form of control of the Bank of England. This limited nationalization is indicated as an ultimate aim, however, and is not regarded as attainable until the great majority of the people have been converted to the policy. For the most part, the measures proposed provide for gradual legislative and administrative reforms. Some of these may be regarded as extreme, but it would not be difficult to bring about a rally of a large | to be more pleasing all around?

part of the Liberal Party in support of many of the others. The nature of the program, the tone of the discussions, and the anticipation of a growing number of the leaders of the Labor Party that the next election may give no party absolute power, all suggest interesting possibilities of open or tacit arrangements for the support of particular measures. This will depend, of course, on the situation as it actually exists after the election, and there is no likelihood of any arrangement before it.

An Aspect of Foreign Trade

THE relations that foreign trade bears to I loans placed in other countries have seldom found clearer expression than when Herbert Hoover in his Boston address declared: "When we make a loan abroad, the amount of that loan is not ordinarily exported in gold, but in goods or service, either directly or indirectly. Most of them find their way out of our country in the form of farm products, machinery, plant equipment and supplies purchased of us.

As the United States Secretary of Commerce. Mr. Hoover had ample opportunity to prove this statement to be a fact. And it ought not be surprising if the Republican candidate for the Presidency had particularly in thought the business relations with the Latin-American countries and the large loans extended these nations from time to time.

During the fiscal year 1927-28, the twenty Latin-American republics bought from the United States products valued at $827,546,475. In that same period the imports to the United States from Latin America amounted to $995 .-592,913. This grand total of exports and imports is in itself a well-nigh balanced relationship which points to a trade understanding of great value. The millions of United States dollars invested in Latin-American securities by the people of the American Union are therefore bearing interest beyond what are the immediate returns to the investors. For, again to quote from Mr. Hoover's address, "we receive the first benefit in markets for our farmers and for the making of goods exported, and that gives additional employment to our people. The borrower receives the second benefit because the installation of American machinery and equipment, whether it be railroads, power plants, harvesting machinery or typewriters, brings greater productivity to the receiving country."

This aspect of foreign trade and foreign loans does not always receive the attention it deserves. Its ethics, however, is beyond dispute. It establishes a co-ordination so reciprocal in its effect as to put a quietus on anyone objecting against lending money to worthy nations. With regard to Latin America, there has been nothing in this interrelationship which is not aboveboard, and Mr. Hoover did well to touch as he did on a phase of business operation to which the department he has been in charge of has contributed so much during the present Administration.

The Evolution of the 'Family Wash'

WHO among our foremothers would have thought that "professional" laundering ultimately would become one of the leading industries in the United States? At the recent convention of the Laundryowners National Association it was said that laundering would be included in the next census for the first time as one of the great industries.

And so the "wash" of a few years ago has evolved into the "laundry" of today. All over the United States, in every city and town and even in some hamlets, the laundry is established—a public utility of no mean importance. Though in no way related to the Eighteenth Amendment the laundries have their "wet" and "dry" issue and in the larger cities such signs "Smith's Wet Wash" or "Brown's Dry Laundering" are by no means uncommon. The evolution of the "family wash" would provide an interesting study. The ancient washtub" in which the good housewife put 'the week's wash" for a soaking every Sunday night and the corrugated scrubbing board upon which the weekly eulogy to a cleaner family was arduously played seem to be fairly on the way to the antique shop. The electric washer has come to relieve the drudgery of "wash day" for those who continue to "do their own washin" and with it such further conveniences as the electric iron and even the automatic drying equipment. The "clothesline" is still a common sight in the backyards of the United States but new and easier and speedier processes of drying sooner or later will send it into the discard with the washtub and the scrubbing board.

And in the meanwhile "professional laundering" rises to a higher plane of dignity and utility. An American Institute of Laundering is to be established in Illinois and through its activities not only will the latest theories as to better laundering receive a thorough test but a school will send out men and women trained in the art of laundering the most delicate of fabrics as well as versed in all the intricacies of "running a laundry."

Editorial Notes

Major-league baseball welcomes Walter Perry Johnson back into its ranks as manager of the Washington Senators, the club for which he pitched twenty-one years. His great pitching arm may be lost to the game for all time, but the qualities of fair play and good sportsmanship which he possesses may still be utilized in the service of baseball. It is to be hoped that he will meet with the same success in his managerial duties as he did in actual combat!

The renown of Herbert Hoover's food relief labors, it appears, is confined to no one continent or hemisphere. In a number of Chinese textbooks, says Dr. Tehyi Hseih, Chinese author and lecturer, he is referred to as "prince of the pantry," truly a refreshing name in this presidential year of many slogans and nominal appendages.

Problems in Ceylon's Proposed Charter

of these post-war years, will see his chief text in the period's political readjustments and experiments. Of Bolshevism and Fascism he will find much to say. Almost as striking will be his chronicle of the rise and development of that paradox of autocratic republicanism which Kemal has erected on the ruins of Turkish absolutism. The not less than amazing modernizing of central Asia -Afghanistan and Tibet, for example-may well take to itself a picturesque chapter, and new-come China will need yet more for a proper telling.

Along with such self-directed attainments as these, a considerable emphasis will be laid of necessity upon the efforts of several of the world's great powers sympathetically to acknowledge, in "the colored continents," the workings of the so-called nationalist sentiment. England and the United States, France and Belgium, have attempted to train for self-government some of the "backward" peoples under their control, that training being in no small measure a practical sharing of certain legislative and administrative activities, in a finely honest, if often also precarious, endeavor to exercise the students in what it was hoped they had learned. The outstanding instances of this, of course, are India and Egypt and the Philippines, but these, after all, are merely the noticeable indices of a movement so broad as to be held epochal.

Recent dispatches from Paris have called attention to work of this sort going forward in Syria. London has made report of British moves to a like end in Irak and Palestine. Now comes similar word with Ceylon as topic. The Donoughmore Commission, having studied the politicosocial situation in the big island in the Indian Ocean, has rendered a report which recommends several genuine changes in both the form and substance of the country's polity. With near-by India's immensity in thought, this might, perhaps, be referred to as a "case in little" of education in autonomy, but it shows itself, also, interestingly typical of the whole trend and manner of today's altruistic effort.

Certain facts regarding this "Isle of Dusky Leaves' should be stated in preface, as in varying degree pertinent to the trial now to be made there. To say that it is some 25,300 square miles in extent, is to write it down as almost as large as Ireland, or quite exactly the area of the State of West Virginia. Its population (4,600,000) parallels, numerically speaking, that of Switzerland or nearly that of Texas. These folk are credited with a civilization of twenty centuries' standing, and history shows them to have been a crown colony, under the Union Jack, since 1802, after 300 years first of Portuguese and then Dutch

More basically important facts are to be added to these. England's promise of self-government to her Indian protectorate, as far and as fast as the natives might show themselves ready for so burdensome a gift, has been taken, in Ceylon, by both ruled and rulers, as applying there, actually though not officially. Steps have been taken in this direction, indeed. In 1910 the electoral system was introduced, albeit the Government retained control of the administrative machinery through the pro vision of a permanent majority of "nominated members' of council. In 1920, and again three years later, came other changes, which left the council as it is today: a total of forty-nine, of whom twelve are official (nominated) members, and thirty-seven nonofficial (elected) members. The latter may debate and vote, but actual administrative control lies with the official members responsible only to the insular Governor.

One other point. The Cingalese, from the first beginnings of the self-determination stir, have played little Olivers of the East, consistently asking for "More!" For a decade, the habitual demand of that part of the population, which is at all politically inclined, has been for complete and immediate home rule.

Last year, the Colonial Office at the British capital appointed a commission of experts, headed by the Earl of Donoughmore, which was to go out to Ceylon, investigate at first hand all relevant matters, and propose a

T SEEMS certain that tomorrow's historian, writing | form of constitution. It is their report which now makes entry on the roster of the current news. As regards political aptitude, it finds a majority of the people indifferent to the autonomy outcry, and a far from inconsiderable number ignorant that it has been made. As to literacy, it announces that about 50 per cent of the islanders are unable to read or write in any language. In the capital, Colombo, with a population of 250,000, only 58 per cent of the males and 35 per cent of the females are literate. Elsewhere, as in Jaffna and Kandy, the disproportion is even more striking. 1 1 1

Most important point of all: what is written on homogeneity? and of unity of popular thought? Ceylon, as India, has failed utterly to develop any such nationalism as could supersede racial origins or differences in cultural attainments. Even the Cingalese (Sinhalese), who may be described as the Ceylon people proper (their historic records begin in 543), are divided into Highlanders and Lowlanders, though together they compose three-fourths of the population. Then there are 1,000,000 Tamils of southern Hindustan stock, and 280,000 "Moormen" of Arab descent. The Eurasians and (Dutch) Burghers number above 30,000, and there are about half as many Malaysians. There are only 8118 Europeans, all told.

Here is a gamut, truly. At one end (not now counting in the Europeans) will be placed the intelligentsia—whom Mr. Kipling terms the "Young-Men-in-a-Hurry"!—who have had training in Western schools and colleges, and stand not only willing, but openly eager, to take on both the form of responsibility and the complicated fact of political power, even while scarce so much as theoretically understanding either. At the other end will be the Veddalis of the jungle and forest areas, still hunting with bow and arrow as did their ancestors in prehistoric times. Between these will range the clerical workers and small traders and peasants and the manual laborers on

The religious differences parallel those that in India are offering the Simon Commission one of its gravest problems. The main divisions are: Buddhists, 2,769,805; Hindus, 982,073; Muhammadans, 302,532, and Christians,

As for the specific recommendations of the report, on what may be termed its technical side, one is first impressed with the departure from the ideal of parliamentary government, which might have been looked for from the findings of a British committee. It proposes a single chamber (still called council) of eighty scats, fifteen to be filled on the nomination of the Governor, and sixtyfive by an electorate, now to be broadened to include women under like qualifications as men. This unicameral body is to exercise both legislative and executive functions, meeting in separate sessions for each. On the inauguration of a council the members are to form them-selves into seven "boards" for executive purposes, the several fields being: agriculture, labor, police, posts and telegraph, railways, trade, and public health. The three departments of treasury, justice, and foreign relations will be headed by appointees of the Governor.

The administrative end of government will thus be handled through committees—these to report back to the council, in executive session, for confirmation of their doings. And the "committee of the whole" will exercise complete control of insular affairs, in their domestic phase. In matters of foreign policy and defense the home Government (London) reserves the right of veto, expressed, of course, through the Governor.

Questions are multiplying, naturally enough, as to how it will work. Is it, indeed, too complicated to be workable at all for inexpert workers? Does it afford reasonable protection for foreign capital (mainly British), invested in rubber, coconut palm, ebony, and so forth? Is it enough safeguarded to prevent any serious danger to a people politically undeveloped?

All the experiments in the world's present-day political science laboratories are interesting. Here is one that displays somewhat spectacular originality—and promises some intricate problems.

From the World's Great Capitals—Paris

THE arms of Paris show a galley in full sail, with the motto: Fluctuat Nec Mergitur. Though the capital of France seems today far from the sea, the arms point to an historical fact that ships once sailed up to the city. In the early days it was commerce conducted in this way which gave Paris much of its importance. The river is the Seine, and a tribute to this river is about to be paid. There exists, quite a distance from Paris and not far from Dijon, a spot where the river first bubbles forth. A rude effort has been made ever since the days of the last French Emperor to turn the surrounding acre into a sort of park. A statue was erected to Sequana, the river deity of the Romans, but she has now become less than presentable. The plan is to put a new statue of her in the place of the one now there, to freshen up the park, clean out the grotto, and excavate a Gallo-Roman temple in the vicinity, so that the source of the Seine may be given a setting suitable to such an important river.

"Sire, it is a great honor for the smallest point in France to receive today the greatest monarch in the world." With these words the Mayor of the diminutive island of Aix welcomed Napoleon in the year 1807, then at the height of his fame. Under far different circumstances, Napoleon passed his last three days on French soil, those of July 12, 13, 14, in the year 1815, on this island. There he debated whether to flee to the United States, or surrender to England. He took the latter course. A museum has just been opened in the dignified house on the Ile-d'Aix where he resided. The rooms have been restored as nearly as possible to the state in which Napoleon left them. The island of Aix lies between the much larger island of Oléron and La Rochelle.

An American in Paris has established a record. He has created the minimum vocabulary requisite for a traveler in this city who desires to see everything worth seeing It consists of two words. With two words of French and a guidebook, and with his experience as an example, you may feel confident that you are ready for an invasion of Paris and that you will take this citadel of culture by storm. His two words were "Terminus" and "Opéra." He used the former when he stepped onto an autobus. This meant clearly that he desired to ride to the end of the line. When he got off, with the help of his guidebook, he found out where he was and visited the interesting places in the neighborhood. Then, calling a taxi, from wherever he might happen to be when he wanted to go home, he would get in and say "Opéra." This would put him down Opéra, from which central point he could reach his hotel by foot in a few minutes.

What price grapes? someone might well exclaim. There was bidding and buying at high prices recently of the grapes of the famous vines of Louis XV at Fontainebleau. Despite the fact that the crop was excellent, it appeared doubtful if all could be supplied with these grapes who wanted to taste them. Restaurant owners and persons of many different nationalities went down from Paris to attend the sale of these sweet grapes. "The treille du Roi," as the vine is called, is famous the world over; and, at least in this respect, reminds one of the great vine of the King of England at Hampton Court, which is claimed to be one of the sights in the vicinity of London.

An innovation in the presentation of a play has set the tongues of theater goers wagging. What next? In the "Barber of Seville," is a real barber to appear on the stage? The cause of the excitement is the appearance in Louis Ganne's light operetta, "Les Saltimbanques," at the Théatre des Gobelins, of Charles Rigoulot in the rôle of the strong man in the troupe of strolling circus performers. M. Rigoulot is not only a strong man, but he claims to be the strongest man in the world, and he brings to his part all his artistry. Instead of lifting his weight before gaping crowds, wherever chance takes him, he now has each evening a whole theater audience before him. He has created weight-lifting records, and at each performance he sets himself seriously to break them if he can. He is, indeed, so suited for his rôle that everyone is wondering if this is the beginning of a new type of Will the next performance of the "Barber of Seville" show us a veritable barber?

There are six heron colonies in all France; there used to be many more. The gradual disappearance of these migrants from French shores has led to a public clamor for their protection. Not everyone protesting has the same motives. To some they are not more than a rare table delicacy, but, nevertheless, out of this campaign there should result a larger number of these graceful birds than France has known for many years. The most important heron colony is near Saint Omer, in the forest of Clairmarais. On 82 trees cling 109 nests, from which those with knowledge of these birds deduce that there must be more than 600 in the colony. In the whole of France it is estimated that there are not more than 450 nests, as compared, for example, with more than 7000 in

The Public Library of Bayeux has issued an appeal that copies of all books about Normandy published of recent years in England or America be sent for its shelves. This library is celebrated for its collection of manuscripts and books dealing with this ancient province of France, and it has also as its most priceless possession the Bayeux tapestry of the eleventh century, on which are woven scenes illustrating William of Normandy's conquest of England, Bayeux, too, has a Gothic cathedral of unusual beauty, the greater part of which dates from the eleventh to the thirteenth centuries. Publishers in France have been very good about sending to this library copies of all books dealing with Normandy, but publishers in the English language have made few contributions lately. There could be no more worthy repository for such books than this historic library.
